Abstract: The attentiveness and professional qualities of today's educators who are valued as educators are the topic of this article.

Keywords: educator, children, dignity, professional qualities

The ability of people to accept responsibility for their work and to execute good deeds in their daily employment, which will contribute to the country's growth, is crucial to the success of large-scale transitions in the Republic of Uzbekistan. The educator (teacher, tutor) serves a noble and responsible duty in society by first educating the younger generation and then providing comprehensive knowledge to our working people.

Educating the younger generation as deserving offspring of our people is a vital, respectable, and serious responsibility for the educator. The educator's political maturity aids the Swedish colleagues in their profession by constantly engaging their talents to grasp their responsibility to the people and society for the quality of upbringing and to solve educational challenges in a creative manner. The educator must be aware of the culture of the country in which he lives, understand natural and social forces, and engage in social activities. Dedication to his career, ideological conviction, love of his profession, and unwavering devotion to this vocation, which separates a teacher-educator from other professionals, is one of the primary attributes of a modern educator. One of the most crucial qualifications for a teacher is a thorough understanding of the subject and its methods. Children's interest in studying will be piqued if they have a thorough understanding of the subject and its theory. It raises the educator's profile. The ability to love children, be interested in their life, and respect everyone is one of the most crucial attributes of an educator. Only a true educator can commit all of his energy and knowledge to educating children to become loyal citizens of the great country of the future. A true educator cannot be unconcerned about the future of the child or uninterested in his or her upbringing. Because the educator must work with both children and parents, patience and good intentions are essential attributes for a modern educator. Every time you communicate with a youngster, it's a new test. The clever little teachers will put you to the test while loving you with all their hearts, and then you will go without a trace. The secret of their pure love is simple: they are open and simple. The task of the modern teacher: to educate a creative, artistic, communicative personality. You need to predict and evaluate your results, develop independence and initiative. Creation of conditions for the realization of each child's individual abilities. To meet modern requirements, the educator must: -active (support children in forms of activity, adapt to them). - able to change - to keep pace with the rapidly changing world and changing children and their parents; - attentive - to oneself, one's own behavior, verbal self-expression, one's own behavior, how one's speech affects others, including children. - competent - striving to improve self-education, requires a qualified professional.
