Abstract: This article shows the uniqueness and balance of the relationship between parents and children. In today's globalized world, several laws and regulations related to child rearing play an important role in our society. In this, that is, the role of parents is incomparable in the development of a child. The culture of dealing with a child, maintaining the balance of relationships, awareness of their experiences are the most important factors that parents need to know.

Keywords: parents, child, education, problems, emotions, experiences, family relationship, internal harmony, respect between family members.

The family is a unique social unit based on the union of spouses, family ties, cohesion of family life, parents' moral, legal and social responsibilities for the upbringing of children and their rights. z has certain obligations to his parents. Duration of family life - a category that describes the dynamics of change from the formation of a family to its disintegration. Family functioning is the way of life and activities of the family and its members, the history of family functioning, and is closely related to the socioeconomic conditions of society.

1. The family's emotional communication function is to maintain certain warm relationships, tenderness, mutual care, mutual support, love, and being loved between members. exercise such skills.
2. The educational function of the family is to pass on the cultural and spiritual heritage from generation to generation, educate the younger generation and provide society with its cultural heritage.
3. Ability to provide physical fitness refers to the conditions under which family members are physically fit, capable and comfortable.
4. The ability to provide spiritual communication stems from a person's desire for his or her genealogy, spiritual and cultural traditions. The reproductive function is not only the function of creating generations and successors, but also the function of the family to realize happiness as parents. Constant level.

A father must be able to listen to a mother. Mothers should also be able to listen to their fathers, support each other when needed, offer advice, and discuss parenting without listening to their children. The two should be able to find an ending so that the child is not prejudiced. Because the child grows up understanding that when I do something, if my father is against me, my mother is with me, or vice versa. For this reason, parents should be able to agree and agree. Parental approval is a big achievement. From time to time, I encourage close friends to try out certain parenting methods to get their child into a beneficial circle. Then I get the answer: "No, my husband won't allow it." Enough, no more. Rather than allowing or forbidding, I think it's whether or not we can harmonize each other's thoughts and convey them. No parenting method will help if the mother disobeys the father or does not support the mother when needed. People who are close in life are more likely to come to a common opinion. In large families living with grandparents, children usually seek refuge from those who stand by their side and try to do as they say. Therefore, grandparents and parents who live in the same household should be able to agree on how to raise their children. This will strengthen the roots of education.

Imagine a 4-year-old boy laying down and enthusiastically building a mosaic. Of course he's still so small he can't do that. They watched from the sidelines and tried to intervene and teach him. You came to him and out of curiosity took his place. The kid is stuck, you prepared for it. You have regained your child's enthusiasm. We killed our child's enthusiasm. His desire died when he learned new knowledge. Second case. A girl of 7-8 years old came to her sister to wash the dishes. He wants to try it to learn a new skill. At that moment, his mother feels sorry for the child and says: "If you break it, don't wash it. Be patient, I'll wash it when I grow up." Her desire to learn something new disappears. The third. situation. The child learned a new instrument such as the piano in 2-3 months. You went to the guest with him. There is a piano there. I'm a newcomer, so I play with mistakes and quit. When he got home, you could tell his parents had humiliated the person for having studied first and then called. Because as parents, we were shaped as individuals. What seems easy to us is not difficult for children. we don't take it to heart. And in this case the child has every right to be angry with us. The child himself loses confidence and finds himself in an upsetting situation. Let's not set big goals for the child first, he is, he needs maximalism. But you don't have to do that from the beginning. It should be done slowly and step by step.

A person should be able to write in life. what do you mean? Husniyat doesn't mean you can write beautifully. Writing is writing sentences without spelling or grammatical errors. Simple example: When you apply, we write your application. Even people who don't know us can rate us based on this application. A person must be able to concentrate and write beautifully. Of course, you don't have to be a journalist or a writer. Anyone from any profession should be able to write. This will give you a higher position in society. The last principle is to be able to express your opinion verbally and fluently. This is also very important. why? For example, many jobs are accepted through interviews. There are other applicants for the position you are applying for. How do you get past them? All indicators are equal to each other. At a job interview, you can get noticed by communicating your thoughts beautifully. The person who wins the interview is the person who demonstrates knowledge, not the person who is knowledgeable.
