Annotation: The development of officer ethics and aesthetics is an integral part of the military education system. It is important for students to learn how to behave professionally and maintain high standards when interacting with other people. The main tasks that need to be solved when developing this aspect are to ensure that students understand the importance of observing ethical principles, teaching them proper etiquette, providing recommendations on the appropriate dress code and instilling values such as respect for authority figures.

Keywords: Officer, military education, development of aesthetics, ethics-aesthetics.

First, it is necessary to make sure that all students understand why ethical behavior matters both inside and outside the classroom. This includes teaching them what constitutes acceptable behavior according to military regulations, as well as explaining why following these rules will benefit their careers in the long run. In addition, they should also be taught proper etiquette so that they can interact with their superiors without causing offense or embarrassment, while constantly showing respect for authority figures.

Finally, it is important to provide recommendations on proper attire when attending official events or representing your unit during field exercises or other events requiring uniforms; this includes understanding the rules for the use of hats along with any additional restrictions related to body art/piercing, etc. In addition, the education of basic values, such as loyalty to their compatriots, Patriotism and dedication are key components of the development of aesthetic feelings among cadets. By solving each of the above-mentioned tasks with the help of lectures, discussions, role-playing scenarios, etc., officers can effectively prepare future soldiers with not only strong moral qualities, but also impeccable taste.

The development of aesthetic ethics among cadets of the officer staff of the Faculty of Military Education is an important task for any educational institution. This requires a comprehensive approach to ensure that cadets can develop their ethical standards and understand the importance of aesthetics in military service. The main objectives related to this task include:

First, it is necessary to raise awareness of the value and importance of aesthetic principles in military education. This can be done by giving lectures on topics such as proper dress code, standards of care, rules of etiquette and other aspects related to good appearance while serving in uniform. In addition, students should have access to materials that will allow them to continue studying these topics independently or during group discussions with peers or mentors.

Secondly, there should be opportunities for practical application, where students can put what they have learned into practice during various activities, such as field exercises or simulations, which require compliance with certain rules of dress in accordance with standard operating procedures (SOP). Thanks to this experience, the student will gain practical knowledge about how following certain protocols leads to success when performing tasks in difficult conditions, while always strictly adhering to established norms.

Finally, feedback from teachers should also help strengthen students' understanding of why maintaining high ethical standards is important not only professionally, but also personally. By emphasizing how even such small details as the choice of clothing affect a person's character, officers undergoing training will better understand why upholding high moral values plays an integral role throughout their career. Ultimately, the development of cadets' sense of respect for the aesthetics of military service helps to foster respect between both colleagues and civilians who may come into contact with military personnel wearing uniforms representing their respective units.
